months of experiments with polyester resin during the winter, succeeded in embedding this 23-K Tennessee gold into clear (sometimes adding a colored back) stones of polyester resin. This unique jewelry is merchandised through about a dozen souvenir shops in the Tennessee mountain area.

The original Appalachians had a volcanic origin. The present Appalachian range is made up of the debris and erosion from a higher range of mountains to the east known as Appalachia. The debris washed off these mountains into a shallow underwater sea and was again compacted into stratified rock. Later, some force (thought to have been horizontal) caused a break and an elevation of the present mountains along a northeast to southwest line with a pitch or dip of 42 degrees toward the southeast. This subsequent raising of the strata was not accompanied by the high heat and pressures of mineralized solutions that accompany volcanic activity.

The now discontinued gold recovery effort, using hookah divers in this rugged area proved an interesting, enjoyable and educational experience even if not financially rewarding! »
